

Draw the Product Before You Build It.

One move today: blueprint thinking. Sketch the experience end-to-end before you commit to a feature.

WHY BOTHER

A Feature List Isn't a Product.

Sketching the experience tells you two things a list can't.

DIRECTION

The moment of truth. Where your product earns its place, or loses it.

DOUBT

Your weakest beat. The frame you most need to test in market.

MAP THE EXPERIENCE

What Journey Does Your Customer Take Through This Product?

READ LEFT-TO-RIGHT

Three moments where your product earns its place.

Each frame is a customer choice. Each one is where you win or lose.

WORKING EXAMPLE

Maya, 16. Third Sleep App This Month.

WHAT DOES YOUR PRODUCT DO FOR HER?

01 BEFORE BED

02 IN BED

03 NEXT MORNING

BEFORE BED

The Phone Reach.

Melatonin, dim lights, alarm set.

WHERE YOUR PRODUCT LIVES HERE

It blocks the gesture, not the urge.

01

IN BED

23:47

02

Maya knows the gesture before her brain catches up.
What does she do now?

WHERE YOUR PRODUCT LIVES HERE

It changes the screen, while the urge is still forming.

NEXT MORNING

The shame loop.

"I'll do better tonight."

WHERE YOUR PRODUCT LIVES HERE

It rewrites the story before the urge returns.

03

The Tell

Each Moment Is a Different Fight.
Your Product Has To Win One.

BLUEPRINT THE MOMENTS, THEN STAR THE TRUTH

THE PAYOFF

It's not the features. It's the frame Maya doesn't bail at.

WHAT THE BLUEPRINT IS REALLY FOR

The Blueprint Isn't a Feature List. It's How You Define Scope.

Map the moments, mark the one that matters, then cut everything that isn't needed

KITCHEN SINK

Everything is a must do. Captures nothing.

VERSION 2

Nice-to-haves that never die. Cut, or commit.

FILL THE BLANKS, DON'T FREE-WRITE

At {moment}, when {trigger}, our product {verb}, so {outcome}.

YOUR RISKIEST WORD

The verb, what your product is FOR, and what you will test first.

FAILS

We help users sleep better. Vague verb. Owns nothing.

WORKS

At 23:00, when the phone unlocks, our product replaces the feed with a paced-breathing screen, so the urge passes.

ONE BLUEPRINT, BUILT IN STAGES

Your Turn.

We do Stage A first frame together, then your team runs each stage. We float, we do not fill it in.

STAGE A

Map moments

5-7 frames

STAGE B

Mark the truth

one star

STAGE C

Cut and defend must / maybe / not now

STAGE D

Translate

into the PRD

STAGE A / ~20 MIN

Map the Moments.

Place 5-7 steps in order. Every real step in the user journey.

BEFORE

What sets the moment up

DURING

Where the product actually acts

AFTER

What carries the user back into life

Checkpoint: 5-7 frames, in order, each one named.

STAGE B / ~15 MIN

Mark the Moment of Truth.

Which frame would your product live or die on?

PLACE

Walk the strip out loud. Say what happens in each frame.

READ

Where is the user most likely to bail?
Where do they care most?

STAR

Mark the one. Not a decision. A bet you would defend.

Checkpoint: one starred frame, one sentence why.

STAGE C / ~10 MIN

Cut & Defend.

WRITE YOUR PRODUCT SENTENCE

At {moment}, when {trigger}, our product {verb}, so {outcome}.
Until {proof}, we won't {scope cut}.

Now sort every other card: MUST / MAYBE / NOT NOW. The not now pile is the test.

Checkpoint: one product sentence, one scope cut you would defend out loud.

BY 16:00, EVERY TEAM HAS

5-7

framed moments, in order

A GOOD BLUEPRINT

Opinionated. One moment is bold. The cut list is real.

starred moment of truth

A LAZY BLUEPRINT

Hedged. Everything is a must. Sentence reads an app that helps users.

product sentence and one defended cut

TWO THINGS HAPPEN NEXT

Where your blueprint goes next.

REALITY CHECK / WED PM

Out in Market. Take your assumptions to real people, not the whiteboard.

TRANSLATE / PAPER FIRST

Your blueprint becomes the skeleton of how you define your product/service.
